The Woman of Maldon tells of the raw struggle of the essence of a 21st Century woman, in her recognition for the female essence itself, where intolerance for women merely being women, is constant and crushing. It is a poignant story of a woman wanting to be allowed to be recognised for what she is herself and what she intrinsically contributes to life. It is a story of society all too critical of everything we are and do, always too rigid to allow any of us to blossom in our unfettered beauty. Too critical, in a life too questioning of our right to openly and frankly participate on our terms. The Woman of Maldon is not a story of feminism, not a story of plight. It is a story of resolute courage and determination which we all possess, in a world where few but the bravest survive, a world of impossible interrelationships. It is the story of living itself. Jan Chambers, a thirty two year old mother of her seven year old son (Evan), and her husband (Clinton), is the dynamic driving force behind this small early 2000 s typical contemporary city family, which she takes to country Maldon, Victoria Australia in 2007, once the hub of the massive goldrush district of 150 years ago. Away from the home, Jan s husband works a small alluvial gold claim he discovered with his metal detector. They buy and move in to the old Maldon Inn, a beautiful old colonial coach route ale house, which Jan renovates and softens as only a woman can. Jan embeds and settles her little family and pony and dog into this idyllic setting and commences trying to...
